Are You Fit for Work? - Part 3 In part 1 and 2 we reviewed CAGE which is the acronym for Cut-Annoyed-Guilty-Eating. This time we learned how to describe our CAGE. In part 3 we will review the CAGES. I like using a reverse pyramid for this stage of the work because, instead of viewing it as something wrong we can do, we need to view it as someone else who might do the same to us. Once we do this meditation, we need to bring it into our work environment. Avoid interacting with people using food to protect ourselves from fear and reactivity. Put a sign on your desk or computer screen that reads, "work with me, not at me." Then explain your sign to others. The overall goal of these CAGES is to help create distance between ourselves and the activity we choose to do. I encourage more time spent in the transcendent that includes what is just and compassionate. We deal with ordinary things like eating our food in a way that creates compassion for ourselves, which needs to be the most important principle to follow. It seems so simple. Yes, you might end up sitting on the sidewalk and bumming cigarettes with the homeless when you first try it, but your personal space is protecting you from something. You do not like meeting them? Then change something in your environment until the tension goes down and it becomes more harmonious. It is the same with work and eating and play. Do some inner work on compassion and what the energy of the thoughts are that arise. Are they potentially harmful? Ask yourself, can I let it go without asking for a resolution? Sample Question Am I putting an emphasis on being

1. Start Mission 2. Map 3. Mission 4. Extra Lives 5. Boss 6. Conquered/Lost 7. Elevators 8. Map 9. End Credits 10. Finale/Conclusion 11. Game Over The first episode to this game (Episode 1: Candy or Meat) is up for download at: (www.carnalgame.net) No internet connection required! This game can be played on a phone (or your dick) so it can play on any system with an Android OS. Buy an android phone for $10 from Amazon and it's only $2 a month! The game is free for the download for Android and PC gamers, and the only cost for the first episode is a purchase of a high-resolution poster (pictured at top). If you don't have any objections to having a dick pic on your wall, you can buy one for $10. At $10, it's more than it costs to rent a movie, and this game is longer than most films. I recommend this game for completionists who like retro games. It is also a good choice for fans of Qwirkle (another ancient-as-time retro game) and puzzle games. 1. You wake up in a strange cabin. 2. You need to escape! 3. What are you going to do? 4. Now go to the start of Episode 1. Game art is unique to the table (like a real-time strategy game), created by laying down some sawdust and gluing it to the board. The game is a little old and has been played by a lot of people (with no Internet), so don't feel like you're getting cheated. I make many updates to the game, and they are all listed on the updates page at (www.carnalgame.net). There's only one hard mode, so the difficulty is not frustrating. I just can't speak enough about the game. You have to see it. It's a time-killer that you won't be disappointed with. Some things I know will make people really crazy, so I'm not going to say them! But you will need to download and play it. Some will be easy for you (the word-search-and-guess puzzle), and others will be a challenge. Expect some nightmares, and maybe just a touch of high-f

What's new in CARNAL:

SMILE AND MOVEMENT In these times of perpetual news regarding the true feelings of a society toward homosexuality. Here is a movie about a middle-aged man dealing with an agonizing decision in his life. David, played by Peter Sarsgaard (SORRY TO BOTHER YOU) is a semi-retired teacher who is acting in a play. David has been a closeted homosexual for thirty-five years. During the course of the play he has had great success with women, and especially an intelligent, ambitious one (played by Michelle Williams - RUSSELL CARNALL). Before the play starts he starts getting checked out by a fringe gay group that he is acquainted with. This organization is about to come together to publicly support him and want him to leave his wife. David don't want to leave his wife because she has Alzheimer's and she could probably never cope with a separation. These radical gay people go to David's house and check out all his womanizing. Afterwards they love David and want him to leave his wife. We see a lot of scenes of David deciding which choice to make. A lot of times he picks the woman. You have to see this in a theatre. Some parts of the film was just unbearable and fit for the Young and the Restless. Some movie reviewers were afraid for their jobs. It may be a divisive subject, but I liked it. I believed the end plays against itself. The actors, director and writer were right to pick up where the play left off. The film is about a man who is struggling to face himself. The audience becomes complicit in his misery because we know, without even being told, what his choice is going to be. Occasionally the experience is shattering. Sometimes it is humorous. One part of the movie does something quite dramatic. This part is where the light switches on David's mind - his heart. This is where the film gains a lot of its emotional force. There is very little artificial stuff going on in this part of the film. Just the way life is. So I was amused when Sarsgaard's character acts out of, well, gay pride so to speak - a huge smile. This makes me feel good just not straight. This is a very beautiful, tender film about a middle-aged man dealing with an agonizing decision in his life. There are many scenes of great depth in the movie. This is film is rich and textured.
