event, labor and housing activists picketed the incoming administration of Donald Trump. In June, the Trump administration announced it planned to withdraw Washington from the Paris agreement. Villanueva said it was likely that Canada would officially enter into negotiations with the United States soon and that the Joint Committee could look forward to an independent voice and a chance to rein in the Trump administration's "reckless" foreign policy. On June 7, the DFA signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with Mexico to strengthen their alliance. This will provide "great momentum" for better trade relations with Mexico and Central America, according to Villanueva. In July, the DFA signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with the government of China to establish a new Office of Americas, which will work collaboratively to expand trade relations with all countries in the Americas and modernize trade regulations. Villanueva said he hopes that the new MOU with China will be a catalyst for a trade deal with the United States, with Canada and Mexico. China wants to access Latin America's markets, and North America's goods, but without having to share and protect its intellectual property (IP) as in NAFTA, and without having to adhere to US environmental, labor, health and human rights standards, Villanueva said. Villanueva highlighted the importance of the World Trade Organization (WTO) as a potential mediator for a NAFTA 2.0 in the wake of the "Reagan-era trade interventions." These agreements have obvious flaws, and despite not being trade agreements, he said they support "unprecedented flows of investment and foreign direct investment" between countries, his remarks reminiscent of a speech he made at the FT Global Trade Forum earlier this year. He told City & State reporter Owen Add
