It renders my login.aspx page, and allows the user to login. After successful login, it returns to the login page. What I'd like to do is to display the username of the logged in user on the page. How can I get this username? I've tried Request.LogonUserIdentity.Name and Request.LogonUserIdentity.get_Name() but both return a Null reference exception. A: Based on the fact you don't post any relevant code it is unlikely this question has a correct answer. I would suggest this: Download and install Fiddler from here Use Fiddler to send a request to your website. Now use Fiddler to view the postbacks sent and the data in each request. You can then figure out what information the server is sending and how to get that information from the server. We Provide Toll Free Numbers And 6d1f23a050
