When you first begin using Android L in your preview build, one of the first things that you may notice is how the system looks and feels. While the Material Design specification is certainly a great idea, the Android developers are already working on putting their final touches on the new OS, and one of the first things that you'll notice is the new "heads up display" which comes in the form of the notification shade. Android L previews are available for several different devices, including the Pixel, Nexus 6, Nexus 5X, Nexus 6P, Nexus 9 and the Nexus Player. These previews are useful for getting a sense of what the OS will be like, and what's coming down the road, but if you plan on upgrading, you'll want to grab your hands on the full preview and get a sense of what the Nougat OS has to offer.
